In order that the test may be carried out at a constant temperature in winter and summer, and since it is easier to heat water than to cool it, these chemists suggest that the 10 test-tubes containing the starch conversions should be placed in a water bath for an hour at a constant temperature of 70 F. (21 C). After the 10 test-tubes containing the malt extract and soluble starch have remained for exactly an hour 5 c.c. of Fehling s solution are added to each, the tubes again shaken, and the whole series placed in a boiling-water bath for 10 minutes. On examination, some of the tubes will be found to be over-reduced, as shown by their yellow colonr, and others under-reduced, as shown by their blue colour. The two consecutive tubes--one of which is slightly over-reduced and the other slightly under-reduced--are selected, the point of exact reduction will lie somewhere between these two, and to arrive at it more accurately, a second series of tubes are started to which quantities of malt extract, between the limits found in the preliminary experiment and differing by 0 02 c.c., are added. The diastatic capacity of a malt is taken as 100 when 0 1 c.c. of malt extract produces sufficient reducing sugar to completely reduce 5 c.c. of Fehling s solution. If, therefore, the 5 c.c. of Fehling s solution were exactly reduced in the first tube of the...
