Excerpt: . left, before and behind us, we beheld nothing but serras, peaks, mounts, and chains of lofty hills, confusedly mixed up together and extending as far as the eye could reach in every direction. The road became more and more solitary--anything in the shape of a dwelling being a rarity. Feathered game, however, was not wanting, and from time to time a wood-pigeon or a partridge would rapidly cross our line of march without any one attempting to bring it down, so great a difference does it make when a man has his bellyful and when he is on the point of starvation. For the first time we perceived some singular cocoons, of the shape of slices cut out of a cheese, having within, curious to relate, more than one chrysalis, as we easily conjectured by the rattle when shaking them. The outer cover, in capital condition, was made of a substance in every respect analogous to silk, and very probably as useful; it is certainly as unknown in Europe as is that of the qui-vuvi spider we have before alluded to, and which we met with very abundantly. The path led us by rapid curves through extensive woods, at one time leading us across a brook with a sandy bottom, at another through a torrent with almost perpendicular sides, hugging the flanks of the serras Catenda, Cachinje and Quilulo, until it brought us out into a long and open plain where the most singular...
